Dear Barge:

Sorry no type writer yet, but otherwise Ruth and I are well tucked into this rather wonderful town. We have a splendid little "flat" or "Bed-sitter" as they call ours, one large room facing on a green court garden with two little protrusions that are Kitchen and Bath. Having our own Bath is a great treat in London, particularly for us after our stay at The English Speaking Union. The people there were grand but the only room with a bath was the wedding suite which we had the first two days and we would not have lasted long at those rates. Our situation now, though, is really great. We are two blocks from Harrods and within our purlieu are restaurants of all the nations of the world where food seems to average about $10 to $11 a night. We don't cook except breakfast. We love it here, the Voices, the order, the grace but our noses are out of joint at all the furious English indignation at the Pinkville massacre - as if that was U.S. govt. policy. I feel like asking them if it is more moral to starve baby to death (Beasia) or shoot him. But I desist. Have found a couple of New 1st editions. Love, Don
